

The Trump effect on ESG investing

Donald Trump, a climate-change sceptic, has been elected the most powerful man in the world. Unsurprisingly, his inauguration is raising questions around the sustainability of progress around environmental issues.

Macro political events are increasingly influencing financial markets; with environmental, social and governance (ESG) a rapidly growing trend amongst institutional investors, it is natural to question the sustainability of this trend under President Trump.

Under the Obama administration, significant progress was made on various ESG-related issues, at a federal and international level. For example, Obama signed the Paris Agreement on climate change, put in place methane emissions regulation in the US energy sector and coal power generation in the US power utility sector. He also promoted better access to healthcare and sought improvement around areas such as the ethical sourcing of materials and human rights practises. From a governance perspective, progress is being made on the potential for mandatory public corporate ESG disclosure via the securities regulator.

Whilst these steps alone are not solely responsible for catapulting ESG investing to the forefront of many investor's minds, the fact that major economies such as the US

Market Insight

by
My-Linh Ng

Senior ESG Analyst

Published March 2017

have actively engaged in supporting climate change and other ESG related issues, cements the view that ESG investment is a viable long-term consideration.

However, the potential for further progress appears to be at risk of stalling or halting completely. During his election campaign, President Trump outlined intentions to withdraw the US from the Paris Agreement and remove environmental regulations which negatively impact the fossil fuels industry and reduce the powers of the US environmental regulator.

With the US being the second-largest CO₂ emission producer globally¹, any efforts to undo the policies adopted could impact any possible progress and potentially disincentivise other countries from taking action.

However, we think initial concerns voiced, whilst valid, may be somewhat overstated. Whilst some of his actions (in appointing key individuals to posts in his administration) appear to reaffirm some of his pledge, we have already seen a softening of some of Trump's election 'promises' and therefore any claims made prior to inauguration need to be substantiated now he is in office.

We think it is unlikely Trump will be able to pull out of the Paris Agreement, although he could fail to take any action. Furthermore, whilst he could influence federal laws, individual states will still be able to take action and go beyond federal standards.

Internationally, other major players such as China and India appear to remain committed to taking action on climate change.

It is clear to us that sustainable development and ESG investing is increasingly moving beyond White House decisions, reflecting the view that economics is again moving markets more than politics. Advancements in technology are leading the private sector to take decisions based on simple economics. For example, the challenges facing the coal industry are being constrained by market forces.

A combination of financial and technological breakthroughs is positioning renewable energy as increasingly price competitive in a number of markets. In transportation, advances in battery technology (coupled with global emissions regulation) is driving down costs and making electric vehicles a credible option, leading to a continued increase in market share faster than anticipated.

Similarly to how financial markets are treating the Trump administration with caution, ESG investors are keeping close counsel for now. We think Trump's presidency may slow the pace of progress in the US on tackling some environmental issues, climate change, healthcare and corporate ESG transparency. However, some of these (especially healthcare) are particularly politically contentious and may be hard to reform. As such, Trump's priorities are likely to be the most emotive issues through which he can achieve quick results, such as tax reform, immigration and trade.

If Trump turns his attention to ESG-related matters, we believe investors should be prepared for some level of uncertainty and volatility in the sectors impacted. But will Trump derail the ESG investing momentum? He's certainly influential, but perhaps ESG has now grown too big for Trump to tackle?

In our view, this ought to extend the recent improvements we have witnessed in both the revenue and earnings performance of HY issuers more generally (although we remain sensitive to the impact of US dollar strength).

This document is issued in the United Kingdom (UK) by BlueBay Asset Management LLP (BlueBay), which is authorised and regulated by the UK Financial Conduct Authority (FCA), registered with the US Securities and Exchange Commission, the Commodities Futures Trading Commission and is a member of the National Futures Association. In the United States by BlueBay Asset Management USA LLC which is registered with the US Securities and Exchange Commission. In Japan by BlueBay Asset Management International Limited which is registered with the Kanto Local Finance Bureau of Ministry of Finance, Japan. In Hong Kong by BlueBay Hong Kong Limited which is registered by the Securities and Futures Commission. In Australia BlueBay is exempt from the requirement to hold an Australian financial services licence under the Corporations Act in respect of financial services as it is regulated by the FCA under the laws of the UK which differ from Australian laws. All data has been sourced by BlueBay. To the best of BlueBay's knowledge and belief this document is true and accurate at the date hereof. BlueBay makes no express or implied warranties or representations with respect to the information contained in this document and hereby expressly disclaim all warranties of accuracy, completeness or fitness for a particular purpose. The document is intended for "professional clients" and "eligible counterparties" (as defined by the FCA) only and should not be relied upon by any other category of customer. This document does not constitute an offer to sell or the solicitation of an offer to purchase any security or investment product in any jurisdiction and is for information purposes only. This document is not available for distribution in any jurisdiction where such distribution would be prohibited and is not aimed at such persons in those jurisdictions. Except where agreed explicitly in writing, BlueBay does not provide investment or other advice and nothing in this document constitutes any advice, nor should be interpreted as such. Past performance is not indicative of future results. No BlueBay Fund will be offered, except pursuant and subject to the offering memorandum and subscription materials (the "Offering Materials"), which in Canada may be provided to Canadian permitted clients only, and not to any other category of investor. This document is for general information only and is not a complete description of an investment in any BlueBay Fund. If there is an inconsistency between this document and the Offering Materials for the BlueBay Fund, the provisions in the Offering Materials shall prevail. The investments discussed may fluctuate in value and investors may not get back the amount invested. You should read the Offering Materials carefully before investing in any BlueBay fund. In Canada, BlueBay is not registered under securities laws and is relying on the international dealer exemption under applicable provincial securities legislation, which permit BlueBay to carry out certain specified dealer activities for those Canadian residents that qualify as "a Canadian permitted client", as such term is defined under applicable securities legislation. No part of this document may be reproduced in any manner without the prior written permission of BlueBay Asset Management LLP. Copyright 2017 © BlueBay, the investment manager, advisor and global distributor of the BlueBay Funds, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Royal Bank of Canada and the BlueBay Funds may be considered to be related and/or connected issuers to Royal Bank of Canada and its other affiliates. ® Registered trademark of Royal Bank of Canada. RBC Global Asset Management is a trademark of Royal Bank of Canada. BlueBay Asset Management LLP, registered office 77 Grosvenor Street, London W1K 3JR, partnership registered in England and Wales number OC370085. All rights reserved. Published March 2017